Acquire Worthwhile Recommendations About Orlando Realtor

Part II

Step 6: Make an offer

How much did similar homes sell for nearby? How long has this house been on the market? (Weary sellers may be more flexible.) Your realtor can evaluate market conditions and help you make a reasonable offer.

Step 7: Sign a contract

You sign and pay a deposit that is held by a neutral third party. In some states, you'll want a real estate lawyer to go over the deal. Typically buyers can back out if the home inspector finds big trouble or if they can't find financing or, in a new twist, Combs says, homeowner's insurance.

Step 8: Take a Close Look at Your House

Make sure your contract is contingent on a home inspection for a detailed, objective evaluation of your home's infrastructure. After, negotiate with the seller over needed repairs. Be sure the title of the house is free of any liens. Your bank will appraise the house, too.

Step 9: Shop for homeowners insurance

Shop around, but your own car or life insurer will probably give you a good package deal. As always, a higher deductible saves you money.

Step 10: Sign papers

You'll meet at lawyer's office or title company, sign a big stack of papers and receive the keys to your new home.
